

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AND EDUCATION, CERTIFICATE

The Certificate in International Development and Education develops global education leaders who understand the complex issues that shape international education and are prepared to engage in transforming policy and practice. Students in this certificate explore a range of topics, including: poverty, inequity, sustainability, colonial relations, human rights, health disparities, and governance. Students will engage in self-reflection and analysis about who they are in relation to international development efforts and learn about new international education innovations that center collaboration and partnership.

Graduates of the certificate program will develop an understanding of the fields of international educational development and change. They can choose elective courses to deepen their research, evaluation, management, curriculum planning, and/or pedagogical skills to engage in reflexive, culturally-sensitive and sustainable approaches to improving education development policy, practice, and outcomes.
